

Young driver countermeasures: What does the future hold?

Ivers, R.

Injury Division, The George Institute for International Health

There have been huge changes in young driver countermeasures both in Australia and internationally over the past 20 years. This presentation will review where we have come from, both in terms of fatalities and programs that address these, and consider where we will need to go in the future. This will include a review of the evidence for effectiveness of systems wide approaches such as graduated licensing, driver education and training programs and technology based countermeasures. New programs likely to be of value in the future will be considered, along with a discussion of the need for better evaluation research.
